LOWER SHERWOOD FARM

How to Interact with Our Animals

DO

- Gently touch neck, back, or shoulders
  Llamas appreciate open-handed, calm strokes along their neckline and shoulders where they feel secure.
- Move slowly and speak calmly
  Deliberate movements and quiet voices keep them relaxed and comfortable in crowd settings.
- Welcome natural face-sniffing greetings
  Llamas and alpacas naturally explore and greet by smelling faces. Do not be alarmed if an animal leans in to sniff your face!

AVOID

- Touching face, ears, tails, or feet
  These are sensitive boundary zones. Reaching toward their ears or muzzles triggers reflexive defensive withdrawal.
- Offering outside food or treats
  Our herd follows carefully balanced forage programs. Human food and wild clippings can cause severe illness, but we do give the occasional treat.
- Sudden gestures & standing behind back legs
  Stay clear of blind spots directly behind back legs and avoid abrupt waving gestures or rapid lunging. If you can't see the animal's eyes, they can't see you.

RESPECT THEIR SPACE

- If an animal walks away, let them go
  A departing animal is requesting quiet space. Always grant them autonomy and physical room to rest.
- Do not chase, follow, or corner
  Pursuing an animal induces stress. Allow them to return to you at their own leisure.
- Observe ear posture cues
  Upright ears denote relaxed curiosity; ears pulled flat back against the neck can signal hesitation or irritation.

About Our Herd & Farm

HERD FAMILY TIES

- Who's related to Who?
  Can you find out who is related to who? Some are siblings, but some are related further back.
- Record Breaking Animals
  Which llama related to the top-selling llama of all time? Which alpaca is related to the top-selling alpaca?
- Collectible Animal Postcards
  Pick up a free 4x6" postcard for each animal at our table! Flip it over to scan their unique QR code and view their full pedigree, and photo gallery online.

ANIMAL FACTS

- Telling Them Apart
  Llamas are much larger (275–400 lbs) with long, curved banana-shaped ears. Alpacas are smaller (120–160 lbs) with short, straight spear-shaped ears.
- Quiet Communicators
  Camelids communicate through gentle, musical humming when curious or content. Alarm calls sound like a donkey or a goose.
- The Spitting Myth
  Llamas and alpacas rarely spit at humans unless severely frightened or mishandled. Spitting is primarily used between animals to establish herd pecking order over food.
